STORY

America's barns are rich in history. However, many continue to be lost to the ravages of time. When these structures can't be saved, Urban Barnwood Furniture allows their beauty to live on through finely crafted furniture for your home.

If only barns could talk

It all started a century or two ago. Trees were cut down manually—with axes. Then from these timbers the hefty beams and boards were cut.

It was a similar process for all the buildings on the homestead: house, barns and sheds or outbuildings. Everything was hand cut and structured using the tried and true mortise and tenon system. Many of the buildings stood for a century or more.

Today, with less farming and as these buildings continue to age some are restored close to their original state and others are felled or disassembled piece by piece, so that as much as possible, the precious natural resource—the wood, can be reclaimed.

After the structure is disassembled, the lumber is hauled to the lumber handling yard where it undergoes a cleaning and drying process. All the lumber is run under a metal detector twice where the nails are marked and removed, then stacked for drying.

It is then kiln-dried to 7% moisture and also to exterminate all the bugs and insects as the lumber moves closer to being useable for handcrafted reclaimed barnwood furniture.

The barnwood process is an excellent green way to preserve the old and vintage and give the precious natural resource—wood—a second life.

Liking Barnwood?

A few things to know

Barnwood is a unique natural resource. All furniture made of wood has its own one-of-a-kind natural quality about it—because no piece has the exact same woodgrain or color characteristics. (This is important to note, because the source of the wood varies and therefore the color can also vary—from very dark to very light on the same piece.)

However, barnwood is in a unique category since it has already served one life in a barn structure somewhere in the midwestern United States before it graces your personal living space in the form of barnwood furniture. An important part of the barnwood reclamation process includes the removal of nails and any other metal that may have been inserted into the wood. Barnwood fans love rustic, however, the metal removal process may cause larger than normal holes in the final furniture piece that may adversely affect the piece's end use. On all chair seats, nail and knot holes are always filled for a smoother user experience. On benches and table tops you will need to request holes to be filled, if desired.

The Urban Loft Furniture brand features handcrafted Dining and Bedroom Furniture made of: Brown Maple, Red Oak, and Wormy Maple, with modern surface textures, including, Smooth, Wirebrushed, or Sawmarks.

While there are variations, and no two pieces are alike, we welcome you to the adventure of the unique. You will truly own a one-of-a kind!

KINGS BRIDGE BAR COLLECTION

This collection is available in all species.

Kings Bridge is a market town in Devon County, England that retains many of its 18th and 19th-century buildings. It provides the inspiration for our Kings Bridge pub collection, which delivers a vintage industrial feel by blending black metal and the warm tones of reclaimed barnwood.
